The hydroxyl radical is the diatomic molecule ·OH. The hydroxyl radical is very stable as a dilute gas, but it decays very rapidly in the condensed phase. It is pervasive in some situations. Most notably the hydroxyl radical is produced from the decomposition of hydroperoxides (ROOH) or, in atmospheric chemistry, by the reaction of excited atomic oxygen with water.

If a conflict in U.S. history ever came with baggage, it has to be the Vietnam War. Although the service and actions of the millions of Americans who fought in Southeast Asia have been slowly recognized, the unpopularity of the war at the time, and for many years after, left a scar in American society. This unpopularity also meant that extraordinary men and units, such as the Military ...

Welcome to TF2 Memes, where people submit posts of their silly TF2 situations, observations, and problems. This blog is run by a single undead admin. Previously I had two comrades, but they all vanished in my time of need! This blog was originally created by Nami, but she hired us three to take care of it (she and the other two have since retired).
